ABSTRACT

This summary provides data on program results for students who participated in New York City's English Instructional Services (EIS) program during the 1984-85 academic year. Approximately 61,000 students from 108 high schools received reading and/or writing instruction during that school year. The report includes: (1) an introduction with information on program objectives and tests used to evaluate students progress; and (2) tables giving the number of students who participated at each school, their attendance, and their reading and writing test results by school and by grade. The objective of the program was to achieve improvement greater than the expected improvement without the program. Of the full-year students, 52 percent met that objective. The objective for half-year students was that they should master one skill on the criterion-referenced tests (CRTs) for every 20 days of instruction. About 85 percent of the half- year students met that objective. The evaluation objective in writing stipulated that students should show writing improvement from their first to their final writing sample. Approximately 80 percent of full- and half-time students met that objective. (PS)

The Office of Educational Assessment/High School Evaluation Unit (O.E.A./H.S.E.U.) annually evaluates each of the Chapter I/P.S.E.N. basic skills programs in New York City's high schools. These evaluations include descriptive information about each program and student outcome data such as attendance and test results.

The 1984-85 information is detailed in several reports available from O.E.A./H.S.E.U. A separate report including program outcome data and a narrative evaluation of program modifications is available for the English Instructional Services, Mathematics Skills, English as a Second Language, College Bound, and College Discovery and Development Programs. Student outcome data are also reported by school for each of these Chapter I/P.S.E.N. programs in a series of data summaries.

This summary provides data for students who participated in the English Instructional Services (E.I.S.) program during 1984-85. Approximately 61,000 students from 108 high schools received reading and/or writing instruction through the E.I.S. program during the 1984-85 academic year. The number of students reported to have participated in the program, their attendance, and reading and writing test results appear by school and by grade in the following tables. The results of approximately three percent of the students cannot be included since their school information was missing or inaccurate.

A word of explanation about the information in these tables is in order. Data are presented separately for students who participated in the E.I.S. program for a full-year and for those who took part in the program for only a single term. This breakdown is necessary since different types of tests are used to assess program effectiveness in full-year and half-year students. Full-year students are tested with standardized, norm-referenced tests (N.R.T.s) administered in the fall and spring while the progress of half-year students is assessed using criterion-referenced tests (C.R.T.s) designed to measure specific skill deficiencies. N.R.T.s are standardized and nationally normed on a full-year cycle. They are not constructed for use with half-year students. When N.R.T.s are administered to half-year students, only a few months apart, the results are uninterpretable. Criterion-referenced tests are used instead of norm-referenced tests to measure improvement in half-year students since C.R.T. results are not based on a comparison with a normative sample and are meaningful at different points in time.

The Wisconsin Design Test is the C.R.T. used to measure reading improvement in half-year students. Two N.R.T.s are used with full-year reading students. The Comprehensive Test of Basic Skills is given to participants in the ninth (Level 3) and eleventh (Level 4) grades while the California Achievement Test is used with tenth (Level 18) and twelfth (Level 19) graders. Writing results are obtained through a holistic method of scoring which relies upon teacher assessments of student writing samples. The holistic method is used to measure writing improvement for both full-year and half-year participants. Students are given reading and writing tests at the beginning (pretest) and at the end (posttest) of their participation in the funded program. Pretest and posttest results are used to determine the program's effectiveness in remediating students' deficiencies in basic skills. Only students with both a pretest and posttest score can be included in these assessments since program effectiveness is determined by improvement in pretest scores that is attributable to participation in the funded program, as measured by posttest scores.

Accordingly, 38 percent of the half-year students and 76 percent of the full-year students reported to be receiving reading and/or writing instruction in the E.I.S. program during 1984-85 had complete test results.

Turning now to the tables themselves; the number of students reported to be enrolled in the program is listed by school and by grade in the first column. Attendance, calculated as the percentage of program classes attended by students, appears in the second column. Reading results are listed in the next several columns while writing results can be found in the last two columns. Only students with complete test results are included in analyses of reading and writing improvement.

The reading results of full-year students are reported in normal curve equivalents (N.C.E.s) in the "mean fall N.C.E." and "mean spring N.C.E." columns. N.C.E.s provide a scale which is similar to percentiles. This measure is a standard against which students at a grade level are compared. An individual increase in achievement is expressed relative to the increase in achievement of all students in the same grade. The evaluation objective of the program stipulates that improvement should be greater than the expected improvement without the "treatment" of the program. To demonstrate progress that is greater than expected a full-year student must show greater improvement than would be expected by chance and previous academic growth. An actual posttest score above the anticipated posttest score may be attributed to the additional "treatment" of the program. Thus, a student whose posttest score is at a higher normal curve equivalent than on the pretest is deemed to have met the evaluation objective of the program. The percentage of full-year students who met the objective in reading is listed in column seven. Overall, 52 percent met this objective in reading.

The evaluation objective for half-year reading students states that students should master one skill on the C.R.T. test for every 20 days of instruction. The average number of C.R.T.

skills mastered by half-year reading students is presented in column four while the percentage of students meeting the evaluation objective is found in column seven. About 85 percent of the half-year students met the reading objective.

Writing results for all students are listed in columns eight and nine. Teachers use a holistic scoring method to judge whether students' writing has shown improvement. The evaluation objective in writing stipulates that students should show writing improvement from their first to their final writing sample. Approximately 80 percent of full- and half-year students met the writing objective.
